October 5, 1926.

I today interviewed Louis Kahler who resides on Fulton Street, New Brunswick and is a foreman at the Elmwood Cemetery. He is the man mentioned to me by Myron Pollard and referred to in my report of the above date as Louis Kalem.

Kahler informed me that he knew Smith and that he was employed as a grave digger at the time of the murder. He claims that Smith never spoke about it in his presence. On two or three occasions following the murder he had seen some detectives out at the cemetery talking with Smith, but they would always take Smith aside so that their conversations would not be overheard.

He never asked Smith about what he knew of the murder and never heard Smith express himself to anyone as to whether or not he had seen or heard anything on the night in question.

Respectfully submitted:
